

Pre-Parental Lessons
Bringing the Gospel to Covenant Children
By Dr Joel Beeke

CHAPTER ONE
Understanding the Need

Church growth books and manuals flood the market. Surprisingly few address internal growth through the Holy Spirit sovereignly blessing the raising of children in covenantal truth. Yet, historically, Reformed Christians have acknowledged that their most solid, genuine church growth has been through the conversion of youth reared in the church. Charles Spurgeon wrote to Edward Payson Hammond, author of The Conversion of Children, “My conviction is that our converts from among children are among the very best we have. I should judge them to have been more numerously genuine than any other class, more constant, and in the long run more solid.”

Andrew Bonar concurred. He also wrote to Hammond, saying, “In awakenings that have been given us, the cases of young people have been as entirely satisfactory as any cases we have had. If conversion be God’s work, in which the Holy Spirit reveals Christ to the soul, surely His work can take place in children as really as in the old.”

Children raised in the church need to hear the gospel, that is, the evangel, every bit as much as adults. They too need to be born again. They too need to be evangelized. In this article on evangelizing covenant children in dependency on the Holy Spirit, we will focus on three concerns:

1. The need for evangelizing covenant children,
2. The content of such evangelizing, and
3. The means for such evangelizing.

Understanding the Need

First, let me define the terms: By “covenant children” I mean those children born to at least one confessing parent (1 Corinthians 7:14), who are baptized, and are growing up in the community of the church, with all the riches and privileges that entails, such as being placed under the prayers of the church and the preaching, invitations, and warnings of God’s Word. By “evangelize” or “evangelizing” I mean presenting the gospel of Christ the Savior as the one thing needful in the lives of desperate sinners, including our covenant children, praying that by Spirit-worked faith and repentance they may be drawn to God through Him, grow in Him, and serve Him as Lord in the fellowship of His church and in the extension of His kingdom in the world.

Today, many parents who have confessed their faith and whose children have been baptized are not adequately evangelizing, i.e., bringing the gospel to, their covenant children. Reasons for this include the following:

- Some parents confuse their children by living inconsistent and impure lives. They have faulty views of their covenant responsibilities toward their children, which leads them to respond inappropriately to the spiritual concerns and questions of their children. They often misrepresent God, election, sin, and the gospel to their children.
- Some parents abuse their children by prompting premature professions of faith through the altar call system or through “easy believism.” They offer verbal assurance of salvation to their children without seeing biblical fruits of salvation. Or else, they err to the other extreme by treating their children like adults in this matter, expecting too much from them.
- Some parents neglect their children by ignoring their spiritual needs, by not stressing the importance of the scriptural doctrines of grace, and by underestimating the challenge of our wicked and tempting times.
- Some parents fail their children because they do not believe that God can convert them. They do not realize that more Christians have been converted in their youth than during any other stage of life. Such failures caused Robert Murray M’Cheyne to say in the 1850s, “Jesus has reason to complain of us, that He can do no mighty work in our Sabbath-schools, because of our unbelief. Let us pray for the children. Let us labour for the children. Let us hope for the children.”

A biblical view of our covenant children would greatly enhance our attempts to evangelize them properly. Before explaining that, let us first examine two errors that many evangelical parents make today in viewing their covenant children:

- They overestimate the covenant relationship. Specifically, some parents overestimate the significance of their children’s baptismal membership in the visible church. They view the covenant as a replacement for the regeneration and conversion of their children. This is particularly true of those who adhere to Abraham Kuyper’s view of covenant children called “presumptive regeneration.” Kuyper taught that the covenant warrants the presumption that children of believers are regenerated from earliest infancy and possess saving grace unless they later reject the covenant.

The fruits of presumptive regeneration are tragic. Parents who presume that their children are regenerate by virtue of the covenant see no need to tell their children that they must be born again. William Young calls this view “hyper-covenantism,” because the relation of children to the covenant is exaggerated to the point that the covenant relation replaces the need for personal conversion. As Young points out, “Doctrinal knowledge and ethical conduct according to the Word of God are sufficient for the Christian life without any specific religious experience of conviction of sin and conversion, or any need for self-examination as to the possession of distinguishing marks of saving grace.”

Consequently, what our Reformed forefathers called experimental religion is deemed largely superfluous. Ultimately, though Kuyperian neo-Calvinists may not like to admit it, religious life becomes grounded in external church institutions and activities rather than in the soul's communion with God. "A system for breeding Pharisees, whose cry is 'We are Abraham's children,' could hardly be better calculated," Young concludes.

Other Reformed, evangelical churches hold slightly different views of the covenant, such as dormant regeneration or covenantal regeneration. But in practice, these also place too much weight on externals of the covenant. They also minimize the necessity of a new birth, a personal relationship with God, and self-examination in the light of Scripture.

- They underestimate the covenant. Many Baptists and some Reformed people reduce the covenant to insignificance. They do this by failing to recognize the importance of the covenantal relationship of children with God. From the New Testament era on, they believe, children of believers have no promise extended to them, and thus by implication have lost their special place of belonging to the covenant of Jehovah.

Surely this isn't the teaching of the New Testament. Scripturally, the covenant relationship of children to God is established from texts such as Genesis 17:7 ("And I will establish my covenant between me and thee and thy seed after thee in their generations for an everlasting covenant, to be a God unto thee, and to thy seed after thee"), Acts 2:39 ("the promise is unto you, and to your children") and 1 Corinthians 7:14 ("for the unbelieving husband is sanctified by the wife, and the unbelieving wife is sanctified by the husband: else were your children unclean; but now are they holy"). God sovereignly and graciously establishes a redemptive relationship with believers and their offspring. It is unthinkable that in the fullness of the gospel era, the children of the New Testament church would have less of a place in the covenant than children of Old Testament Israel. Practically, Christian parents of the New Testament church who cared deeply about their children would have clamored for clarity on the covenantal position of their children had God really intended them to have no promise, no sacramental sign and seal, and no rightful place among His people.

Some Reformed churches depreciate the covenant relation of children, not by rejecting infant baptism and the covenant relation altogether, but by reducing the sacrament to mere form and custom without insisting on what it should mean for the lives both of the parents and their baptized children. In such circles, the church has no eye for the promises of God in baptism, no heart for pleading those promises in prayer, and no clear understanding of how God earnestly calls covenant children to a lifestyle consecrated to Himself and separated from the world.

Properly Estimating the Covenant

The covenant must be viewed neither as a substitute for regeneration and conversion nor as a matter of secondary importance. The covenantal relationship, which is confirmed in infant baptism, means the following to believing parents:

1. Baptized children must be born again. Our Form for the Administration of Baptism tells us, "Our children are conceived and born in sin, and therefore are children of wrath, insomuch that [they] cannot enter into the kingdom of God except [they] are born again.

Our children . . . therefore are subject to all miseries, yea to condemnation itself.”
The Belgic Confession of Faith says:

We believe that, through the disobedience of Adam, original sin is extended to all mankind, which is a corruption of the whole nature, and a hereditary disease, wherewith infants themselves are infected, even in their mother’s womb, and which produceth in man all sorts of sin, being in him as a root thereof; and therefore is so vile and abominable in the sight of God that it is sufficient to condemn all mankind. Nor is it by any means abolished or done away by baptism, since sin always issues forth from this woeful source as water from a fountain.

Baptism, the sign of one’s external relationship to the covenant, is not sufficient for our children’s salvation. Baptism affirms that the baptized child is placed under covenant privileges and responsibilities, but does not make the child a partaker of the saving, internal essence of the covenant. The external covenant relationship can be broken when a child grows to adulthood and abandons God’s Word and the corporate worship of His people. Baptized children must be linked to the internal, unbreakable essence of the covenant through the regenerating work of the Holy Spirit (John 3:3-7). Only then shall they be given persevering grace for the rest of their lives.

Without the Spirit’s sovereign, saving work, all our efforts to train our children covenantally will do no more than produce Pharisees on the one hand or rebels on the other. Grace is not automatically conveyed from one generation to another through baptism and faithful covenantal child-rearing. Samuel Rutherford, a Scottish divine who stressed the value of the covenant of grace, wrote, “Grace always runs in the covenant of God, but it does not always run in the blood of the veins.” Only the Holy Spirit can bless our efforts and grant our children a broken heart and a contrite spirit (Psalm 51:17).

2. Baptized children must be directed to Jesus Christ and His sacrifice as the only way of salvation. Christ’s cleansing blood, symbolized by the cleansing water of baptism, is the only way by which our children may be saved. Baptism teaches us and our children “to loathe and humble ourselves before God, and seek for our purification and salvation without [i.e. outside of] ourselves,” the Reformed liturgy says.¹¹ Question 72 of the Heidelberg Catechism says, “Is then the external baptism with water the washing away of sin itself? Not at all; for the blood of Jesus Christ only, and the Holy Ghost cleanse us from all sin” (Matthew 3:11; 1 John 1:7).

3. Baptism demands new, heartfelt obedience to God. As our liturgy says, a true covenantal relationship with God requires repentance and love toward God, faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ, and a lifestyle of separation whereby “we forsake the world, crucify our old nature, and walk in a new and holy life.” We must teach our children that they are not allowed to bring their “baptized foreheads” into ungodly places, to bond with ungodly people, or engage in ungodly activities.

We must also teach our children that being outwardly good and obedient also falls short of their covenantal obligation to God. We must shepherd their hearts, teaching them daily by our words and example that they are called to holiness of heart and holiness of life. Paul tells us in 1 Timothy 4:4-5 that everything is to be sanctified. The call to holiness is an absolute, comprehensive, and exclusive call involving separation from sin and consecration to God from the heart. “My son, give me thine heart” (Proverbs 23:26).

4. Baptism requires parents to instruct their children in the Christian faith and the doctrine of salvation (see Q. 3 of the Form of Baptism). Numerous texts make the instruction of children the primary responsibility of the church’s parents (Exodus 12:24-27; Deuteronomy 6:4-9; 2 Timothy 3:14-15).

Children are entrusted to us with the divine command that we are not to provoke them to wrath but to “bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord” (Ephesians 6:4). We are not to raise them according to our own ideas of nurture and admonition but according to “the nurture and admonition of the Lord.” God says that we must train our children in every respect—spiritually, morally, socially, emotionally, and physically—on His behalf and according to His Word.

The entire book of Proverbs illustrates the manner and substance of parental covenantal nurture. The covenant home must be a temple in which God is acknowledged and worshiped (2 Samuel 6:20; Ps. 34:11-14; 90:16; 105:5-6; 118:15; 132:12; 147:13).

5. Baptism teaches that God, in and through the Second Adam, Jesus Christ, is able and willing to be the Redeemer and Father of our children. “As they are without their knowledge partakers of the condemnation in Adam, so are they again received unto grace in Christ,” the Form concludes. Our children are Christ’s covenant seed (Psalm 22:30; Isaiah 53:10). He calls them “an heritage of the LORD” (Psalm 127:3). They belong to Him. He has a claim upon them, even in their unregenerate state, just as He had a claim upon all the children of Israel, calling them His even when many were not truly born again (Ezekiel 16:20-21).

6. God ordinarily works savingly among His covenant seed. Among the unchurched and uncovenanted, God occasionally draws children to salvation in Christ. Sunday schools and other evangelistic outreaches have been particularly helpful in this respect. As Psalm 68:5-6 says, God is “a father of the fatherless.... God setteth the solitary in families.” But among His covenant people, His saving grace is the norm, due to His amazing covenantal love and His blessing upon faithful parenting. As Herman Witsius wrote:

Here certainly appears the extraordinary love of our God, in that as soon as we are born, and just as we come from our mother, he hath commanded us to be solemnly brought from her bosom, as it were into his own arms, that he should bestow upon us, in the very cradle, the tokens of our dignity and future kingdom; that he should put that song in our mouth, “Thou didst make me hope when I was upon my mother’s breast: I was cast upon thee from the womb: thou art my God from my mother’s belly” (Psalm 22:9-10), that, in a word, he should join us to himself in the most solemn covenant from our most tender years: the remembrance of which, as it is glorious and full of consolation to us, so in like manner it tends to promote Christian virtues, and the strictest holiness, through the whole course of our lives.

The covenant creates the context in which we make diligent use of the means of grace, and we believe that the God of the covenant often honors such use of His ordained means, though, being the sovereign Jehovah, He is by no means obliged to do so (Romans 9:11-13). Nevertheless, Scripture affirms that the Holy Spirit richly blesses the evangelizing and nurturing of covenant children in knowledge, faith, love, and obedience (Genesis 18:19; Proverbs 22:6). Faithful parenting, by the Spirit's blessing, frequently issues in regeneration and a life of covenantal faithfulness (Psalm 78:1-8).

Knowing such things should encourage us more to evangelize our children and to plead for their salvation, never giving God rest until they are all brought safely into His fold. Then, too, we must teach our covenant children and young people to plead with our covenant God on the basis of His promises to baptize them with the Spirit of grace and to grant them regeneration, repentance, and faith.

7. We can expect great things from a covenant-keeping God. Malachi 2:15 stresses that God desires a godly seed and Psalm 103:17 promises His mercy and righteousness to children's children.

Scripture offers many examples of God-fearing children. Exodus 20:6 affirms in Hebrew that God shows mercy unto "thousands of generations" that love Him and keep His commandments. The evangelization and nurture of the church's children has been one of the greatest means of church growth ever since the church's beginning in Eden.

Church history also confirms God's faithfulness to His covenant children, shown by the God-honoring fruits in their lives. Thomas Boston, Matthew Henry, William Carey, David Livingstone, and John Paton were all the products of godly homes. Godly lines of succession, as can be found in the Edwards, Mather, and Hodge families in America, can easily be multiplied.

We do not expect children to act like adults, however (1 Corinthians 13:11). Their spiritual experiences will usually be commensurate with their age, but the same fruits of grace—such as hatred for sin, love for Christ, and yearnings for holiness—that are evident in adults will be evident in them.

Covenant theology does not negate the need for us to evangelize our children, nor does it discourage us from doing so. Scripture offers no guarantees for the salvation of our children, but the covenant of grace offers us a great deal of hope outside of ourselves in a sovereign, covenant-keeping God, who will not forsake the works of His own hands (Psalm 138:8). Covenant theology should encourage us to evangelize our children as we daily, prayerfully, and expectantly depend upon the triune God for His blessing upon our efforts.

We cannot take this encouragement for granted, however. No matter how well you teach, train, and model godly living for your children, God is still sovereign and He rules (Isaiah 14:27; 46:10; Romans 9:11-13; Ephesians 1:5-9). We must rest in the triune God who declares that all things are "of him, and through him, and to him" (Romans 11:36), then trust that the Holy Spirit is able and willing to sovereignly and graciously convert covenant children.

If God commanded that children hear the gospel repeatedly throughout the Old Testament era (Exodus 12:25-27; Deuteronomy 30:19; Joshua 4:21-24), shouldn't we also tell the gospel to our children in the fullness of the New Testament age? If Christ commands the church to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature (Mark 16:15), shouldn't we also evangelize our covenant children? If Paul used every opportunity to carry the gospel to people all around the world, shouldn't we seize every opportunity to evangelize our own children (Acts 20:1-16)? If Paul felt it was his duty to bring the gospel to all men, making himself a servant to all (1 Corinthians 9:19-22), shouldn't we become servants of the gospel to our own children to evangelize them?

We may never opt out of our covenant responsibility to evangelize our children. Deuteronomy 6:7 says that we must teach God's Word to our children "diligently," that is, with steady, earnest attention, and energetic application and effort. Psalm 78:4-7 says, for God's covenant sake we are to show "to the generation to come the praises of the LORD, and his strength, and his wonderful works that he hath done, [so] that the generation to come might know them, . . . might set their hope in God, and not forget the works of God, but keep his commandments" (cf. Psalm 71:17-18; 145:4).

CHAPTER TWO

Teaching the Content of the Gospel

Your task is to teach your children the whole gospel and counsel of God, as Paul said he did for the Ephesians (Acts 20:17-27). Fathers, you especially are to be ministers in your own houses. Your home is a little church, a little seminary, in which together with your wife, you are to serve as an instructing prophet, an interceding priest, and a guiding king. As a prophet, you must teach your children God's truth, addressing the mind, the conscience, the heart, and the will. That means you must teach your children Bible stories and Bible doctrines, and you must apply those stories and doctrines to their daily lives for their proper development—spiritually, morally, socially, emotionally, and physically.

You must also explain how God's truth is experienced by His people—that is, how matters should and do go in the lives of those who know God in Jesus Christ. Aim to apply divine truth to the whole range of your children's experience. Teach them how God's people repeatedly experience the depths of their sin and misery, the fullness of deliverance in Jesus Christ, and the magnitude of gratitude to God for such deliverance. All of this is to be done in the context of biblical piety.

You may feel that this task overwhelms you. "Exactly how do I communicate these truths to my children?" you ask. "I am confused and nervous, even afraid, to speak to them about God and salvation. I've never done it before—certainly not adequately. How should I impress the claims of the gospel upon my children?"

In evangelizing your children, it is helpful to break down your task into specific doctrines. Here are some specific doctrines you should stress with your children, if you would bring them God's whole counsel:

1. Teach them who God is and what He is like. Use the Scriptures and the Psalter to proclaim God's majestic sovereignty, His triune personality, and His glorious attributes to your children. Study Psalm 139, Isaiah 6, Isaiah 40, John 1, and Ephesians 1 with them. Root the evangelizing of them in a robust biblical theism rather than that of modern evangelicalism, which treats God as if He were a next-door neighbor who can adjust His attributes to our needs and desires.

Tell your children about the sovereign, holy character of God—that He cannot forgive sin “without the shedding of blood,” for “the wages of sin is death” (Romans 6:23). Tell them about God's righteous judgment and holy wrath against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men. Tell them that God hates sin and demands that parents punish sin in their children because it is God's will that sin be punished. Tell your children how you as parents are to exhibit the character of God even though you, too, are sinners and need God's grace to do that. Ask them to pray for you so you may model the character of God in the Lord Jesus Christ.

2. Teach them the seriousness of sin. You must show your children that they have a heart problem because of the Fall. Teach them, as the New England Primer said: “In Adam's fall, we sinned all.” Explain to them at a level they can understand the great truths of Genesis 2 and 3: that God created us perfect, after His image in knowledge, righteousness, and holiness. Teach them that Adam represented us in Paradise and how we fell in and with him so that we have become selfish, proud, and wicked. His sin has now become our sin; it is our state and condition, and it causes death. Tell them that is why we must all die.

The idea of total depravity and misery is helpful to use as a starting point in explaining Reformed, experiential truth. Illustrate for them how bad we are by nature. For example, show them a cup that is white on the outside and black on the inside. Tell them that is much like us—we can appear quite pure in our behavior but are black with corruption within. We are all conceived and born in sin (Psalm 51:5).

Teach them also that we have the problem of a bad record and are all lawbreakers. Explain that because we are sinners we commit a host of sins in thought, word, and deed. Call sin, sin. Tell them, lovingly yet firmly, that no one had to teach them how to sin—to become angry, to disobey, to be selfish, or to be jealous— because by nature we are all sinful. Explain how their first acts showed sin. When you must discipline them, remind them that the sins they commit flow from their corrupt, sinful hearts.

Stress the sinfulness of sin. Read and talk about Romans 3:9-20 with your children. Explain how sin is disobedience to God and how it grieves Him and cuts us off from Him. Explain that the least sin involves more evil than the greatest affliction and that sin is the poison that makes us comfortable with the ungodly world and with Satan. Aim to convict them of sin and to foster a due sense of the fear of God by addressing their consciences, even as you realize that the Holy Spirit alone, through irresistible grace, can bless your efforts by truly convicting them of sin and leading them to a childlike fear of God.

3. Teach them what the Bible says about unrepentant sin. Teach them that sin is moral rebellion against God, and that those who persist in it will reap eternal condemnation. Teach them about hell to create within them, by the blessing of the Spirit, a sense of need for Jesus Christ. Use Christ's teaching on the tares and wheat, or on the abuse of talents (Matthew 13:30-50; 25:28-46), to describe hell as a place devoid of God's favor and blessing. Concentrate more on the essence of hell than on its vivid details.

Children must know that they are in danger of hell and that it is a dreadful place where sinners will be left in sin without any hope of forgiveness. Children are not served by blinding their eyes to this truth. You must teach them this as lovingly and soberly as you can, praying they will repent of their sin before God and believe in Christ alone for salvation.

Don't be afraid to talk to your children about hell, as that can make a deep impression upon them. They can become very silent when you speak to them about hell. But that knowledge is an important evangelistic tool in your arsenal of truth—a tool that the Holy Spirit has used throughout church history to show His children that they need to forsake sin and flee from the wrath of God to the cleansing blood of Jesus Christ.

4. Teach them they must be born again (Psalm 51:6-7, 10; John 3:3-5). The nature and consequences of sin are the same for children as for adults. Children must be taught that their bad hearts and bad records make them unfit for communion with God. Do not dismiss your children's sins as mere naughtiness or childish behavior. Don't excuse their sins by repeating clichés such as, "Boys will be boys." And never encourage them to feel that being outwardly good is sufficient in God's eyes.

More than good behavior is needed to meet the demands of God; inward regeneration of heart through a triune God is essential for salvation, as Christ stressed with Nicodemus (John 3:3-7). Our children are not merely sick and in need of reformation; they are born dead in trespasses and sins and need regeneration (Psalm 51:5; Ephesians 2:1). Explain to young children the difference between a physical heart and a spiritual heart, and set before them the basic marks of grace.²⁴ In elementary school years, explain to them that Christ was addressing Nicodemus as a "master in Israel," and therefore he was externally in covenant with God, yet Christ tells him that he and the people he represents must be born again. Point out to them the plural in the statement, "Ye must be born again," and stress that this still applies to them today. As teenagers, explain the biblical appeal regarding the need for "circumcision in heart" (Deuteronomy 10:6; 30:6; Jeremiah 4:4; Romans 2:25-29; Colossians 2:11). Expound Paul's description of the true Israelite as "the true circumcision" (Philippians 3:3), and compare that with Christ's description of Nathaniel in John 1:47. Study with them Paul's definition of the true seed of Abraham in Romans 4:11-12 and Galatians 3.

Impress these truths in every way you can, appropriate to their age. Pray for wisdom to teach clearly and for grace to feel deeply your children's inability to do anything toward their salvation while refusing, at the same time, to shirk your responsibility because of their inability. Cling to the hope that there is more goodness and ability in God than badness and inability in your children, that God's grace supersedes their wretchedness and hell-worthiness. As Samuel Bolton said, “There is more goodness in God than evil in ten thousand hells of sin.”

5. Teach them about the moral law and its uses:

- The civil use. Explain how God uses the law in public life to guide the civil magistrate as he rewards good, punishes evil, and restrains sin (Romans 13:3-4). Teach them that the law is a reliable standard of right and wrong, good and evil, for the home and family life as well, and that we as parents must use the law to promote righteousness and to restrain wickedness. Just as society would lapse into anarchy without the enforcement of God’s moral law, so our homes would lapse into chaos without the Ten Commandments being strictly enjoined. We need this first use of the law to regulate the life of the home.
- The evangelical use. Explain to your children how the law, wielded by the Spirit of God, serves a critical function in the experience of conversion. It accuses, convicts, and condemns. It exposes our sinfulness, strips us of all our righteousness, condemns us, pronounces a curse upon us, and knows no mercy. It declares us liable to the wrath of God and the torments of hell. Galatians 3:10 says, “Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them.” But the law does all this to drive us to the end of the law, Christ Jesus, who is our only acceptable righteousness before God (Galatians 3:24). Teach your children that the Holy Spirit uses the law as a mirror to show us our impotence and our guilt, to shut us up to hope in mercy alone, and to induce repentance, creating and sustaining the sense of spiritual need out of which faith in Christ is born.
- The didactic use. Teach your children that when a sinner is saved, he still needs the law as a rule of life. God uses the moral law to sanctify believers in their daily walk of life. Show them from the Heidelberg Catechism the difference between the convicting, evangelical use of the law (Lord’s Day 2) and the didactic use of the law that promotes thankfulness (Lord’s Days 34-44). One way of teaching young children this difference is to explain Luther’s assertion that the law is like a “stick”—the Holy Spirit first uses it as a rod to beat a sinner to Christ, then, after conversion, as a cane to assist a believer in walking as a follower of Christ.

Show your older children from the Psalms, the Sermon on the Mount, and the ethical portions of Paul’s epistles that believers relish the law as a rule of life (see especially Psalm 119). Explain to teenagers how walking in accord with God’s law keeps believers from antinomianism (anti=against; nomos=law; i.e., being against the law) on the one hand, and legalism on the other. Show them how obedience to God’s law promotes brotherly love (1 John 5:3) and authentic Christian freedom (Psalm 116).

6. Teach them that the atoning blood of Jesus Christ is the only way of salvation. Again and again, explain to your children the basics of the gospel: how Jesus saves sinners through His suffering, death, resurrection, and life. Use especially the book of Romans, notable chapters such as Isaiah 53 and 1 Corinthians 15, and individual verses such as 2 Corinthians 5:21 and 1 John 1:9. Use illustrations to explain the principle of substitution. Here is one that I use for young children:

One day Tom's class had a substitute teacher. His friend, George, who was handicapped, disobeyed the teacher. The teacher ordered George to stand in the corner with his face to the wall. She didn't know that George couldn't stand because of his weak legs. So Tom raised his hand. When the teacher called on him, Tom asked, "May I stand in the corner for George?"

Surprised, the teacher asked, "Why would you want to do that, Tom?"

"George can't do it," Tom said, "so I want to take his place."

The teacher let Tom stand in for George. Then the teacher told the class, "That's what Jesus does for sinners like us. We have all been disobedient. Every time we are disobedient we sin. We deserve to stand in the corner of God's anger and wrath. But we can't stand in the face of God's anger. His anger is too great against sin, and we are too weak to stand. So, out of His great heart of grace and love, God sent His Son to stand in the corner to bear the sins of sinners like us. Jesus did that when He suffered in the Garden of Gethsemane and especially when He died on Calvary's cross. He didn't suffer and die for Himself but for people like George, and you, and me, who can't stand in the corner of God's wrath. Just as I am letting George go free for Tom's sake because he is taking George's place, so God lets sinners who believe in Jesus go free because Jesus takes their place."

Use Scripture and illustrations to explain the basics of the gospel. Tell your children why Jesus had to obey the law perfectly, pointing out that we cannot do so by nature, and why He had to pay for sin to satisfy the justice of God. Stress that the cross and salvation flow from the Father's love and that all the persons of the Holy Trinity delight to save sinners.

7. Teach them the necessity of faith in Jesus Christ. Walk them through John 3, and stress verse 36, "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life: and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him." Teach them that the gospel is one thing and our response to it is another. Tell them they must believe and yet can't believe unless the Holy Spirit gives them the grace to believe.

Show them illustrations of the trusting character of faith, such as this story: A famous minister from Scotland, Thomas Chalmers, once talked to an elderly woman for hours about her need to believe in Jesus Christ. She kept insisting that she didn't dare believe. She was afraid that she, rather than God, would be saving herself if she believed. Chalmers couldn't get her to understand the nature of faith as God's gracious gift and left quite discouraged.

To return home, Chalmers had to walk over a sturdy bridge that spanned a small stream in the woman's yard. As he approached the bridge, Chalmers stood back, looked at it suspiciously, then touched it with his fingers. Then he jumped back in fear.

The woman, watching from her window, was astonished. After Chalmers repeated the act a few times, the woman shouted, “Lippen till it! Lippen till it!” an old Scottish expression meaning, “Trust in it,” or “Depend on it.”

Chalmers shouted back, “Depend on Jesus Christ. He’s as safe as this bridge. He’ll bring you across!”

The woman’s eyes were opened. She had not questioned Christ’s trustworthiness, but now she saw the gospel warrant to believe. By grace, she trusted in Christ—and Him alone—for salvation. She believed and was saved.

In addition to explaining what faith is, explain to your children what saving faith does, using chapters such as Romans 3 and 4, Galatians 3, Hebrews 4 and 11, and James 2. Teach them how faith wholeheartedly assents to the truth of the gospel and falls into the outstretched arms of God. Tell how it flees in poverty to Christ’s riches; in guilt to Christ’s reconciliation; in bondage to Christ’s liberation. Tell how it lays hold of Christ and His righteousness, uniting the sinner with the Savior. Tell how it embraces Christ in belief, clinging to His Word and relying on His promises. As Luther wrote, “Faith clasps Christ as a ring clasps its jewel.” Faith wraps the soul in Christ’s righteousness, then lives out of Christ. Faith commits the total person to the total Christ.

Show them from Ephesians 2 that faith and grace are not competitors, that salvation is through faith because only in faith is divine grace honored. Invite them to flee to Jesus and to respond to the gospel in faith, but don’t put all the stress on the will. Tell them they have a duty to repent, not just as a temporary feeling of sorrow, but as a full amendment of life.

Then, too, urge them to “cease to do evil; learn to do well” (Isaiah 1:16-17) and to be holy as God is holy. Call them to love God and His holy law with heart and mind and strength, and to let nothing stand in the way of obedience. Plead with them to seek the Lord while He is near and to “strive to enter in at the strait gate” (Luke 13:24).²⁷ Tell them to do this now, lest they be in danger of hardening. Tell them they must remember their Creator now in the days of their youth (Ecclesiastes 12:1).

8. Teach them about Jesus Christ. Do what Jesus did on the road to Emmaus: begin at Moses and the prophets, and expound to them in all the Scriptures the truths concerning Jesus Christ.

Present the whole Christ to your child. Tell the child who Christ is, what He has done on Calvary, and what He is doing now at the right hand of the Father. Use Philippians 2:5-11 to explain His states and natures. Offer Him as prophet, priest, and king. Do not separate His benefits from His person or offer Him as a Savior from sin while ignoring His claims as Lord. Speak of Him winsomely. Speak of His preciousness, His ability, His willingness to save children. Extol Christ. Explain how He is altogether lovely for needy sinners (Song of Solomon 5:16). Tell them what you find in Him—that for you to live is Christ and to die is gain (Philippians 1:21).

Strive to develop a biblical, Christ-centered worldview in your children. Teach them that every thought must be brought into captivity to the obedience of Christ (2 Corinthians 10:5). Assist them in setting Christ at the center of every subject and every sphere of life. Help them to see that in Christ, the precious Redeemer and sovereign King, all of life's issues meet. He is Lord of all and will put all things under His feet (1 Corinthians 15:24-25). To Him is all power and authority given in heaven and earth (Matthew 28:18).

9. Teach them about sanctification and holiness. Talk to your children about the fruits of grace that are evident in the lives of children who are born again. Teach them that redeemed children will hate sin, fear God, love Jesus, and long to be holy. Show them from the Bible that holiness will become visible in such children through their gratitude, service, prayer, obedience, love, and self-denial. Go through the Beatitudes (Matthew 5:3-12) and Paul's list of the Spirit's fruits (Galatians 5:22-23).

Teach them that God's children will love the things of God: His Word, His Sabbath day, and His people. They will covenant their lives back to God by surrendering and consecrating all that they are and have to God and His kingdom (Matthew 6:33).

Explain to them various inducements to holiness, such as:

- God calls us to holiness for our good and His glory (1 Thessalonians 4:7)
- Holiness makes us resemble Christ and preserves integrity (Philippians 2:5-13)
- Holiness gives evidence of justification and election, and fosters assurance (1 Corinthians 6:11; 2 Thessalonians 2:13; 1 John 2:3)
- Holiness alone can purify us (Titus 1:15)
- Holiness is essential for effective service to God (2 Timothy 2:21)
- Holiness fits us for heaven (Hebrews 12:14; Revelation 21:27)

10. Teach them about the joy of heaven. Focus on the blessedness of being with God, the holy angels, and all the redeemed, and of the believer finally becoming what he has desired to be ever since his regeneration—perfectly holy in a Triune God, a son of God and fellow-heir with Christ (Philippians 3:20-21; Romans 8:17). Explain from Hebrews 12:1-2 how Jesus was motivated to endure His sufferings by anticipating the joy of His reward. Let your children see how you long for the day when Jesus Christ returns to establish a new heaven and a new earth (2 Peter 3:13-14).

In all your teaching, be reverent and serious, yet natural. Let your children feel that what you speak is real. Look them straight in the eye as you speak. Show your love for their souls. Don't be afraid to weep as you speak of the loveliness of Christ or warn them to flee from the wrath to come. Do not joke with your children about any Bible truth, Bible character, or Bible instruction. Do not make light of the things of God. Life is too serious, death too final, judgment too certain, and eternity too long to indulge in humor about the sacred truths of Scripture.

CHAPTER THREE Using the Means

Once you have explained the gospel content to your children, how do you use that to confront your children with the claims of the gospel?

You must first realize as parents that you are primarily responsible for the evangelism of your children. Practically speaking, that means making sure that any person, institution, or thing that has regular influence over your child for any length of time—be that a church and its office-bearers, a school and its teachers, a babysitter, or the high-tech world of computers—has the same Bible-centered, Christ-honoring world-life view that you have.

Children need consistency, particularly in the three major sources of input in their lives: home, church, and school. These three form a triangle, and we as parents are responsible for all three. For now, let's examine our responsibility in the home.

A godly home is the greatest context of evangelism for children. It involves these ingredients:

1. Prayer. "A family without prayer is like a house without a roof, open and exposed to all the storms of heaven," said Thomas Brooks. We need to pray for and with our children. Specifically, we must pray:

- Habitually. Designate a time and place for prayer in your daily schedule, and place children at the top of the list. Prayer is the first and best thing we can do for our children. "You can do more than pray after you have prayed, but you can't do more than pray until you have prayed," John Bunyan wrote.

- Spontaneously. Whenever we feel the need to pray for a child, we ought to pray immediately. Our Dutch forebears called that "hat-on" praying, meaning literally to pray with one's hat on, offering short, pungent petitions while driving, ironing, studying, or doing anything else. If we hesitate when we receive such impulses, the urge to pray will be greatly diminished.

- Covenantally. We must pray for our children, pleading upon their covenant relationship with God. God has placed His name beside theirs in baptism and claimed them as His. Show Him the baptized foreheads of your children. Like David, plead, "Have respect unto [thy] covenant" (Psalm 74:20), for Thy glory's sake.

- Specifically. Our prayers are often riddled with clichés. Our children need deliberate, specific petitions that wage war against the hostile culture of our day, which competes for their souls. Praying for each child's specific needs should be done individually by each parent, but also together. We must pray for conversion, for saving faith, and for preserving grace for each child. We must pray for the daily assaults and struggles to which our precious children are subject.

For believing children, we should pray through the Beatitudes and the passages on the fruits of the Spirit. We should pray that these children's minds will be filled with the good things of Philippians 4:8 and that their wills may be fenced in by the Ten Commandments.

We must pray for ourselves as parents, too, asking for strength for specific tasks, wisdom to make good decisions, and for patience and endurance in the ongoing task of parenting.

- Earnestly. Prayer is our greatest weapon in raising a Christian family. As the old saying goes, "The devil trembles when he sees the weakest saint upon his knees."

Let's seek grace to pray as Alexander Whyte did for his children:

O Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, give us a seed right with Thee! Smite us and our house with everlasting barrenness rather than that our seed should not be right with Thee. O God, give us our children. Give us our children. A second time, and by a far better birth, give us our children to be beside us in Thy holy covenant. For it had been better we had never been betrothed; it had been better we had sat all our days solitary unless our children are to be right with Thee.... But thou, O God, art Thyself a Father, and thus hast in Thyself a Father's heart. Hear us, then, for our children, O our Father.... In season and out of season, we shall not go up into our bed, we shall not give sleep to our eyes nor slumber to our eyelids till we and all our seed are right with Thee.

Charles Spurgeon once wrote, "How can a man be a Christian, and not love his offspring? How can a man be a believer in Jesus Christ, and yet have a cold and hard heart in the things of the kingdom towards his children?... It is our business to train up our children in the fear of the Lord; and though we cannot give them grace, it is ours to pray to the God who can give it; and in answer to our many supplications, he will not turn us away, but will be pleased to regard our sighs."

Spurgeon's mother was one who prayed this way. Spurgeon remembered sitting on her lap and feeling her warm tears as she prayed, "Lord, Thou knowest if these prayers are not answered in Charles's conversion, these very petitions will have to bear witness against him in the day of judgment."

The lesson was not lost on her son. "The thought that my mother's prayers would serve as witness against me in the Day of Judgment sent terror into my heart," Spurgeon later wrote.

Seek grace by prayer to bring the benediction of Almighty God upon your household (Matthew 11:12). Pray earnestly, remembering God's rich promises to answer prayer (Isaiah 30:18-19; Matthew 7:7-8; John 16:23-24). Rely on God's sympathetic ear (Hebrews 11:6). Pray with faith and persistence (James 1:5-7; Luke 18:1), according to God's will (1 John 5:14-15), trusting that God will answer in His time. As John Witherspoon, the only minister to sign the Declaration of Independence, wrote: "I could tell you some remarkable instances of parents who seemed to labor in vain for a long time, and yet were so happy as to see a change at last; and of some children in whom even after the death of the parents, the seed which was early sown, and seemed to have been entirely smothered, has at last produced fruit.”

Jeremiah 10:25 warns us that God will pour out His fury upon families who do not call upon His name. But blessed are those children who can later say, “The prayers of my God-fearing father and mother kept me from much sin and led me to the Lord Jesus Christ.”

2. Family worship. Like Abraham, lovingly but firmly command your household to worship God (Genesis 18:19). Be determined, like Joshua, to serve and worship God daily in your family (Joshua 24:15). As head of the household, gather your family at least once a day for Scripture reading, biblical instruction, prayer, and singing. Here are some helps on how to implement these four aspects of family worship:

- Scripture-reading. First, have a plan. For example, read 10-20 verses from the Old Testament in the morning and from the New Testament in the evening. Or read through the Psalms, then a series of biographical portions. Or read the miracles and parables of Christ. Whatever plan you have, be sure to read the entire Bible with your family over a period of a year or two. Give your children the whole Bible, even while they are young.

Second, take into account special occasions. On Sunday mornings, you might want to read Psalm 48, 63, 84, 92, 118, or John 20. On a Sabbath when the Lord’s Supper is being administered, read Psalm 22, Isaiah 53, Matthew 26, or John 6. Or, you may want to read appropriate portions for such special days as Christmas, New Year’s Eve, New Year’s Day, Easter, Pentecost, etc. When you embark on a trip, read Psalm 91 or 121 together.

Third, involve the family. Let everyone who can read have a Bible in front of them. As head of the household, assign portions for the children to read, too. Teach them to read reverently, slowly, and with expression. Provide a brief word of explanation when needed before, during, or after the reading.

- Biblical instruction. When you teach, be pure in doctrine (Titus 2:7). Don’t abandon doctrinal precision when teaching even young children. Aim for simplicity and soundness.

Major on the basics. Teach your children the Ten Commandments, the Lord’s Prayer, and the Apostles’ Creed as a preparation for further instruction. Repeat them aloud as a family periodically in family worship. Or, use books to assist you, such as plain Bible expositions (e.g., Ryle’s Expository Thoughts on the Gospels, 7 vols.), Bible stories (e.g., VanDam, MacKenzie, Vos, Vreugdenhil), daily devotionals (e.g., Hawker, Spurgeon, Jay, Mason, Gurnall, M’Cheyne), or stories of God at work in church history (e.g., Building on the Rock, 4 vols.).

Be plain in meaning and style. Encourage questions. Draw them out. Ask your children questions appropriate to their varying ages. Have one or two good commentaries on hand as a family, such as those of John Calvin, Matthew Henry, Matthew Poole, and John Gill, to assist the entire family in understanding various texts.

Be experiential and relevant in application. Bring in the soul's experience of the truths you are teaching. Don't be afraid to share your own experiences, but do so simply.

Be affectionate in manner. Proverbs sets the tone for you with its warm, "My son...." Proverbs shows warmth, love, concern, and urgency pulsating in the heart and exhortations of the father.

Reach down into the world of your children. Use concrete, not abstract, concepts. Simplify sermons you've heard for them. Try to tie in biblical instruction as much as possible with current events in the family, society, or nation.

Require your children's full attention. God's truths demand a hearing. You have matters of life and death and eternity to convey. Carry out Proverbs 4:1, "Hear, ye children, the instruction of a father, and attend to know understanding." At times, you will need to say and enforce, "Sit up, son, and look at me while I'm speaking. We're talking about God and His Word, and He deserves to be heard."

- Prayer. Be plain without becoming shallow, be natural and yet solemn, be direct yet varied. Come before God with adoration and dependence as a family. Invoke him properly, making mention of His name, and perhaps one or two of His attributes. Confess family sins and ask for forgiveness for every transgression of the day. Plead for temporal, spiritual, and eternal mercies. Intercede for family friends. Offer thanksgiving for mercies already received. Conclude by blessing God for what He is in Himself and for what He has done for your family. Express the wish that His glory may forever continue. Conclude with a final plea for pardon for the sake of His Son.

- Singing. Introduce your children to the songs of Zion. The Psalms speak to the heart of every believer and cover the whole range of Christian experience. Buy copies of The Psalter for every member of the family. Stress those songs that emphasize core truths of the gospel, and that are rich for devotion, instruction, or admonition. For little children, begin with a stanza or two from simpler texts such as numbers 7, 10, 24, 49, 53, 140, 162, 203, 235, 246, 268, 281, 322, 345, 370, 394, 408, and 431. Later, teach them songs that address the problem of sin such as numbers 83, 110, 141-144, 217, and 362, and songs that are full of Christ's person and work, such as numbers 3, 28, 47, 125, 183, 200, 303, 318, 368, 399, and 426. Make frequent use of doxologies, such as numbers 196, 197, 315, 413, and 420:5.

Sing family favorites, but introduce new songs from time to time. Reinforce what is being taught in school or catechism class by using Psalter selections assigned for memory work. Encourage habits of good singing such as good posture, proper use of the voice, and clear diction.

Remind your children that they are singing portions of God's Word which should be handled with reverence and care. Pray with them for grace in the heart so that they may sing to the Lord as He commands in His Word (Col. 3:16). Meditate together on the words you sing.

Let your family worship be regular and sincere. As Richard Cecil said, “Let family worship be short, savory, simple, tender, heavenly.” God requires such family worship, the Lord Jesus is worthy of it, Scripture demands it, conscience approves it, and children profit from it. Specific reasons for family worship include:

- The eternal welfare of your spouse, your children, and your own soul
- The satisfaction of a good conscience
- A powerful tool to assist you in rearing children
- The brevity of life
- Love for the glory of God and the welfare of His church

Heed the advice of J.W. Alexander, who wrote: “Fly at once, with your household, to the throne of grace.” Beg the Lord to bless your feeble efforts and save your children. Plead with Him to take your covenant children into His arms for all eternity.

3. Catechizing. The word “catechism” derives from the Greek word katecheo, which consists of two words, kata, meaning “down toward,” and edecheo, meaning “to sound.” Katacheo is to “sound down,” to speak to someone with the goal of receiving something back as an echo. The catechetical method of questioning sends out the Word and its doctrines to hear responses, to receive back answers that probe the heart and gauge the depth of knowledge.

The New Testament speaks often of catechizing. Luke says that he wrote his gospel “that thou mightest know the certainty of those things, wherein thou hast been instructed [catechized]” (Luke 1:4). Apollos was “catechized” in the way of the Lord (Acts 18). Catechizing obeys the Spirit’s command through Paul to Timothy, “These things command and teach” (1 Timothy 4:11).

Parental catechizing is almost a lost art today, to the great loss of families and churches. John J. Murray writes, “We believe it is to the discontinuance of this practice [of catechizing] that we can trace much of the doctrinal ignorance, confusion and instability so characteristic of modern Christianity.”

Catechizing sorely needs reviving. “Home-catechization” was the backbone of the Reformed church in its early centuries. The Puritans in particular were great catechists. They believed that pulpit messages should be reinforced by personalized ministry through catechesis—the instruction in the doctrines of Scripture using catechisms. Parents were expected to have a special time each week, in addition to family worship, in which they catechized their children in the Reformed doctrines of grace.

The Puritans teach us much about home-catechization. Puritan catechizing was evangelistic in several ways:

First, scores of Puritans reached out evangelistically to children and young people by writing catechism books that explained fundamental Christian doctrines via questions and answers supported by Scripture. For example, John Cotton titled his catechism, Milk for Babes, drawn out of the Breasts of both Testaments. Other Puritans included in the titles of their catechisms such expressions as “the main and fundamental points,” “the sum of the Christian religion,” the “several heads” or “first principles” of religion, and “the ABC of Christianity.” At various levels in the church as well as in the homes of their parishioners, Puritan ministers taught rising generations both from the Bible and from their catechisms. Their goals were to explain the fundamental teachings of the Bible, to help young people commit the Bible to memory, to make sermons and the sacraments more understandable, to prepare covenant children for confession of faith, to teach them how to defend their faith against error, and to help parents teach their own children.

Second, catechizing was evangelistic in relation to both sacraments. When the Westminster Larger Catechism speaks of “improving” (that is, making good use of) one’s baptism, it refers to a task of lifelong instruction in which catechisms such as the Shorter Catechism play a decisive role. William Perkins said that the ignorant should memorize his catechism, The Foundation of Christian Religion, so they would be “fit to receive the Lord’s Supper with comfort.” And William Hopkinson wrote in the preface to A Preparation into the Waie of Life, that he labored to lead his catechumens “into the right use of the Lord’s Supper, a special confirmation of God’s promises in Christ.”

The more their public efforts to purify the church were crushed, the more the Puritans turned to the home as a bastion for religious instruction and influence. They wrote books on family worship and the “godly order of family government.” Robert Openshaw prefaced his catechism with an appeal “to those who were wont to ask how you should spend the long winter evenings, [to] turn to singing of psalms and teaching your household and praying with them.”

Finally, catechizing was evangelistic as a way of examining people’s spiritual conditions, and for encouraging and admonishing them to flee to Christ. Baxter and his two assistants spent two full days each week catechizing parishioners in their homes. In addition to that, on Monday and Tuesday afternoons and evenings he catechized each of his seven family members for an hour per week. Those visits involved patiently teaching, gently examining, and carefully leading family and church members to Christ through the Scriptures. J. I. Packer concludes: “To upgrade the practice of personal catechising from a preliminary discipline for children to a permanent ingredient in evangelism and pastoral care for all ages was Baxter’s main contribution to the development of Puritan ideals for the ministry.”

Puritan churches and schools considered catechism instruction so important that some even appointed official catechists. At Cambridge University, William Perkins served as catechist at Christ’s College and John Preston, at Emanuel College. The Puritan ideal, according to Thomas Gataker, was that a school is a “little church” and its teachers “private catechists.”

Puritan evangelism, carried on by preaching, pastoral admonition, and catechizing, took time and skill. The Puritans were not looking for quick and easy conversions; they were committed to building up lifelong believers whose hearts, minds, wills, and affections were won to the service of Christ.

The hard work of the Puritan catechist was greatly rewarded. Richard Greenham claimed that catechism teaching built up the Reformed church and did serious damage to Roman Catholicism. When Baxter was installed at Kidderminster in Worcestershire, perhaps one family in each street honored God in family worship; at the end of his ministry there, there were streets where every family did so. He could say that of the six hundred converts that were brought to faith under his preaching, he could not name one that had backslidden to the ways of the world. How vastly different was that result compared to the results of today’s evangelists who press for mass conversions, then turn over the hard work of follow-up to others!

Here’s some practical advice on how to catechize your children today:

- Catechize your children at least once a week. Thirty minutes is sufficient for younger children; 45-60 minutes is more appropriate for interested teenagers. If they’re not being catechized in church or at school, you should catechize more frequently.
- Arm yourself with sound Reformed catechism books. For older children, for example, you could use the Heidelberg Catechism, the Westminster Shorter Catechism, or both. You could also use a catechism based on these catechisms, such as that of John Brown or Matthew Henry.⁴⁶ Or you could use a program of books. Here’s one set of books that covers grades K-12 and has Teachers’ Guides for every volume:

K-1 Bible Questions and Answers (Carrine Mackenzie)

2-3 The Truths of God’s Word (Diana Kleyn/Joel Beeke)

4-5 Bible Doctrine for Younger Children, Books A and B (James Beeke)

6-7 Bible Doctrine for Older Children, Books A and B (James Beeke)

8-12 Bible Doctrine for Teens and Young Adults, Books 1, 2, 3 (James Beeke)

Another approach would be to teach doctrine from a classic like John Bunyan’s Pilgrim’s Progress.

- Assign your children questions to memorize, then pack your teaching with questions that flow out of the questions memorized. Draft five to ten questions off of the questions that your catechists are to memorize. Remember, catechizing is not lecturing. Dialogue with your children. Question, re-question, correct, explain, encourage, guide, and review with your catechists.

- Mix your teaching with numerous illustrations taken from Scripture and daily life. Use poetry, metaphors, similes, acrostics (i.e., every word or line beginning with a particular letter, such as Psalm 119), parallelisms (i.e., two or more lines expressing thoughts in parallel relationships to each other, such as Psalm 119:105), and various mnemonics (i.e., techniques of improving the memory, such as “TULIP” for the Five Points of Calvinism) to make doctrine stick and come alive. Use your catechism as a map to guide your children through the Scriptures.
- Prepare each lesson well. Read, study, and memorize. If possible, spend a few hours on each lesson. The souls of your children, and your own spiritual well-being, may well make these hours the most profitable of your week.
- Begin each catechism lesson with Psalm-singing, Scripture reading, prayer, and review of the last lesson. Ask one of your children to close with prayer.
- Persevere in love. Even when you don't see fruits, press on in prayer, preparation, and teaching. Teach winsomely, with passion and love. Children are rarely fooled; we need to show love for the Word and the doctrines we teach. Keep reaching for greater depth. The gospel's simplicity is precious but that simplicity never robs it of profundity. Aim to raise stalwart, doctrinally knowledgeable sons and daughters who will, by grace, hold fast the Reformed faith with conviction. In dependency on the Spirit, aim to bring your children, who are the heritage of the Lord, to the Lord who is the heritage of covenant children. Pray that your children, by grace, will love instruction and the God of the truths taught.

May God help us today to view the evangelizing of our covenant children as a task that involves both bringing the gospel to them and so presenting Christ and the doctrines of grace that believing children may grow in Him. We need to recover the vision of our forebears in our catechizing, such that we view evangelism as entailing both how to come to Christ and how to live out of Christ.

4. Godly conversation. Scripture teaches that we must take time each day to speak to our covenant children about God. Serious, spiritual conversation should be done in regular times of family worship and teaching, but also spontaneously through the process of everyday life. As Deuteronomy 6:7 says, “Thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up.”

Each day includes four basic teaching times:

- Rising up. How we begin our days is so important. With your children, focus on God at the beginning of each day. Scripture and prayer, together with some edifying comments, is a far better way to begin a day than simply grabbing a bowl of cereal and passing your children as they rush to school or play. Spend a few minutes together as a family in communion with the Lord each morning.

- Sitting at home. Many families do not spend enough time at home. Consider reserving at least one evening per week to help keep the family close to God and each other. Talk, eat, read, and spend time together. Pray and speak to one another about God and His Word. Family nights are wonderful times for spiritual conversation, teaching, and edification.
- Walking by the way. When we walk with our children or ride somewhere with them in the car, we have wonderful opportunities to instruct them about God and the way to live. Our reactions to the events and challenges of our daily lives is also a powerful teaching tool for our children. Show your children as you walk along the road of life how God works and how to make choices that please Him.
- Lying down. Bedtime is a special time to talk with your children. Do you have a nightly routine for instructing them about God? Reading Bible stories or good books, praying, and playing quiet, sacred music are good tools for bringing your children's day to a close. If your children are young, sit next to them on their beds, and speak to them about their day. Assure them of your love. Invite them to share their failures, challenges, and prayer concerns. One way to do this is to begin by sharing your own.

End the day on a positive note; remove any malice that exists. Help your children count their blessings. Show them how to thank God for the merciful events of the day. Remind them that we need to beseech God to forgive our many sins and to meet our soul's needs at the close of each day. In short, every day of our lives must be punctuated with the truths of God and His grace.

All conversation with your children need not be spiritual. Parents who have a meaningful relationship with their children can talk about the natural and the spiritual and back to the natural again with no discomfort or awkwardness. Learn to draw your child out, and encourage him to discuss anything with you. Don't feel you must have all the answers to everything, but do use sound Reformed commentaries and literature to assist you. Search for answers together with them, or, better yet, train your children how to find some of the answers on their own. Teach them how to use Strong's concordance, various word helps, and commentaries as they grow older.

Learn how to enter your child's life. Enjoy relating to your child where he or she is at. That will mean different things at different ages, such as wrestling with your son, walking in the woods, drawing him out in talking about his friends, striving to understand his feelings, and discussing his goals and dreams. If that relating is not done successfully, we will not hit the target.

In talking with your child, you'll be taking the spiritual temperature of that child. So get to the heart of the matter. Discern what your child is capable of understanding, then, adjusting your vocabulary accordingly, tell the child what is involved in becoming a Christian. Don't wait until the child raises the subject; you must initiate it.

The Hebrew word for instruction in Deuteronomy 6:7 says that we are to "sharpen" or "impress" upon our children the teachings of God's Word. The idea is that we are to mark, brand, penetrate, and disciple our children in God's ways. That is our daily calling. Remember, it takes time and diligence to make a lasting impression (Isaiah 28:9-10). As fossils contain deep impressions, so we are to leave impressions of God's truth upon our children that will last for a lifetime and beyond.

5. Godly models. If we would have godly children, they must see God's character in our lives. Though they may learn much from what we say and do, they will learn most from who we are. Our praying, teaching, and living must be one; we must be and practice what we pray. "God cannot resist a parent's prayer when it is sufficiently backed up with a parent's sanctification," wrote Alexander Whyte.

We must not fail to act as our children's spiritual mentors. Besides the Bible, our lives are the most important book our children will ever read. What do they read in the pages of our lives?

We can be no better as parents than we are as persons. Our lives must display love for God, our neighbors, and our children as well as proper love for the value of our own souls. We must strive for balance in all our relations. God instructs us in the verses prior to Deuteronomy 6:7 that we are to love God with all our heart, soul, and might. Love for God must motivate us to love our children unconditionally—but not their sins. We must model the gracious unfailing love of the Triune God for His children even as He hates their sins. Such unconditional love is a special calling and opportunity given to us, for love for their persons may touch the hearts of our children and make them tender in ways that all our admonition can never accomplish.

How will our children see this love in us towards God, themselves, and others? Mostly through our words and actions as we move through the day. In this, they will see and instinctively feel:

- How important God, prayer, the Bible, and worship are to us, and whether we approach God with eager expectation or out of a mere sense of duty.
- How much time and energy we spend in spiritual devotion.
- How we respond to affliction.
- If we really believe that all things work together for good for those that love God (Romans 8:28), that not a hair can fall from our head without the Father's will.
- If we are repenting parents who hate sin, trust in Jesus Christ, and joy in the Holy Spirit.
- If we grieve mostly over selfish things or over things that grieve God.
- If our marriage reflects the Bridegroom-bride/Christchurch models of Ephesians 5.
- If we enjoy praying, talking, playing, vacationing, and being with our children.

- If we're willing to deny ourselves for our children's sake.
- If we discipline our children appropriately and with love, or inappropriately and in anger.
- How we approach our vocation—as a calling from God in which we strive to use our talents for His glory, or as a selfish endeavor in which we imbibe the world's mentality of working for the weekend.
- How we treat those who offend us, spread rumors about us, or are our enemies.
- If we are kind, compassionate, and forgiving to others (Eph. 4:32), and spur them on to love and good deeds (Heb. 10:24).
- If we pray for others (James 5:16) and offer them hospitality without grumbling (1 Pet. 4:9).
- If we rejoice with those that rejoice and mourn with those that mourn (Rom. 12:15).
- How we honor those in authority over us, such as policemen, the government, and office-bearers.

As our children grow older, they become more astute at measuring our lives against the Beatitudes or the fruits of the Spirit. They will test Christianity in us, asking such questions as, Is the Christian life worth living? How we act as parents will be the most influential answers to this question.

Children need to see the gospel authenticated by us. We are the living gospel (cf. 2 Corinthians 3:1-3), for better or worse. Our children's idea of God will be shaped by what we teach and who we are. If we do what God requires, we will be able to say to our children when they become adults and move out of our homes, "Continue thou in the things which thou hast learned and hast been assured of, knowing of whom thou hast learned them; and that from a child thou hast known the holy scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus" (2 Timothy 3:14-15).

Consider, too, involving other believers in the lives of your children, such as elderly saints, "mothers in Israel," God-fearing grandparents, missionaries, and Christian pen pals. The covenant community is rich in such persons and, with the Spirit's blessing, they can be a great help to you and your children in modeling and mentoring living Christianity.

Finally, use special occasions in the church to assist you in modeling Christianity. For example, the funeral services of the congregation present an important occasion rich in opportunities to evangelize children. A pre-schooler can feel the reality of death beside an open coffin and may ask significant questions. Children should not be strangers to the house of mourning, or even to the face of death. Older children can also be profitably engaged in ministry to the sick, the grieving, and the aged members of the church. Model such involvement for your children, and draw them into serving others commensurate with their age and opportunities.

How can we live up to such a calling? We must begin by repenting of our indwelling sin, our inconsistent walk, our ignorance of the Bible, and our failure to evangelize our children. Then we must, with holy fear and solemn conviction, realize our covenantal responsibilities to our children and take refuge in God, treasuring the covenantal promises and grace He desires to bestow for Christ's sake upon unworthy parents. As Robert L. Dabney says:

The instrumentalities of the family are chosen and ordained of God as the most efficient of all means of grace—more truly and efficaciously means of saving grace than all the other ordinances of the church. To family piety are given the best promises of the gospel, under the new, as well as under the old dispensation. How, then, should a wise God do otherwise than consecrate the Christian family, and ordain that the believing parents shall sanctify the children? Hence, the very foundation of all parental fidelity to children's souls is to be laid in the conscientious, solemn, and hearty adoption of the very duties and promises which God seals in the covenant of infant baptism.

CHAPTER FOUR Concluding Applications

Psalm 103:17-18 says, "The mercy of the Lord is from everlasting to everlasting upon them that fear him, and his righteousness unto children's children; to such as keep his covenant, and to those that remember his commandments to do them." This text sets forth a three-step program that summarizes Christian parenting: first, to keep watch over and prepare one's own heart ("fear the Lord"); second, to be faithful in all the duties of the covenant ("keep His covenant"); and third, to live according to God's commandments before one's children and to act towards them as God commands ("remember His commandments to do them"), which includes instruction, nurture, and admonition.

Leading a child to Christ involves much more than the few minutes it takes to lead him or her in the "sinner's prayer." It is not a one-time event. Some thoughts you should keep in mind: 1. Leading a child to Christ is a journey—usually a long journey—in which you must be radically dependent upon the Spirit of Christ. You cannot effect your children's conversion; only the Holy Spirit can do that. Our hope is that the sovereign Holy Spirit delights to convert covenant children as much as the Father delights in saving them from generation to generation and the Son delights in suffering them to come unto Him.

The triune God's sovereign, electing grace is always the primary cause of our children's conversion, which God is pleased to work out through the secondary causes of the means of grace. The same Holy Spirit, who convicts us of our sin and leads us to Christ and into the pathways of holiness, is also faithful to comfort us, teach us, and lead us in evangelizing our children, making it fruitful.

Depending on the Holy Spirit will help us become more sensitive to the spiritual needs of our children and our impossibilities. He will provide us with greater wisdom and patience than if we try to convert our children in our own strength.

2. Evangelize your children at every opportunity, for the window of opportunity is rapidly closing. Parenting is like archery. When our children are young, we have the privilege of getting shots up close. In later years, the target is at a greater distance. As parents, we must take advantage of the times when our children are young, for when they become older, they may go off to college, move away, or get married.

As parental marksmen, we only get a few shots per target. Once our children have been released into the world, they are on their own. We cannot stop them from going there, though we can still pray for them. Cherish each arrow, each opportunity, in your quiver. Sharpen those arrows and pray that you may be the archer for Christ that your children need. Pray that the Holy Spirit may direct your arrows to lead your children to find the one Mediator between God and man, Christ Jesus.

3. Don't abandon your post as marksman until you see fruits in your children such as conviction of sin, righteousness, and judgment; of regeneration and conversion; of repentance and faith; of sanctification and perseverance. Don't rest until you see in them signs of spiritual poverty, mourning over sin, meekness before God, hungering and thirsting after Christ's righteousness, mercifulness, pureness of heart, and joyous cross-bearing under persecution (Matthew 5:3-12). Press on until you see fruits of the Spirit: "love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance" (Galatians 5:22-23).

Richard Mather once preached a sermon that included what covenant children on the way to hell might say to their parents. On the Day of Judgment they would say, "All this that we here suffer is through you. You should have taught us the things of God and did not. You should have restrained us from sin and corrected us, and you did not. You were the means of our original corruption and guiltiness, and yet you never showed any competent care that we might be delivered from it. Woe unto us that we had such carnal and careless parents. And woe unto you that you had no more compassion and pity to prevent the everlasting misery of your own children."

God forbid that our children would ever say such things to us. Rather, let us pray that we can say when they leave home as young adults: "My dear son (or daughter), you know that we have taught you God's Word and wrestled for your soul. Though we were far from perfect, we have set a God-fearing example before you. You didn't see in us a sinless piety but you did see an unfeigned faith. You know we sought first the kingdom of God and His righteousness. Your conscience will bear witness to the fact that Christ was the center of this home. We sang together, prayed together, and talked about the truths and ways of God. If you turn away from all this light and these privileges and insist on going your own way, we can only pray the more that all our Bible study, praying, and singing will not rise up against you in the Day of Judgment. See to it, by God's grace, that we will not have to stand on the Day of Judgment on the right side of Christ and see you standing on His left side."

“Happy indeed,” wrote J.C. Ryle, “is the father who can say with Robert Bolton on his deathbed to his children: ‘I do believe that not one of you will dare to meet me at the tribunal of Christ in an unregenerate state.’”

4. Finally, remember it is never too late to begin evangelizing your children. Some of you may say, “This message is too late for me. What if I have failed all my life to evangelize my children?”

It is not too late. Your sin has been serious, but you may still do the following:

- Pray for your children. God can make crooked sticks straight, even after your departure. Years after Hezekiah died, God answered his prayers and converted Manasseh (2 Chronicles 33:9-13).
- Confess your sin to them, asking their forgiveness for not evangelizing them.
- Speak to your grandchildren, and bring them the gospel.
- Speak to the children of the church to which you belong.
- Consider the possibility of assisting in your church’s Sunday school and other ministries to children.
- Engage in serious family worship with your spouse, beginning where you should have begun decades ago.

Children bring us great joy and great anxiety. They delight us and frustrate us. Loving them means leading them in the ways of God, for their greatest pleasure will be found in knowing and serving Him. May God help us all to lead children and grandchildren in the ways of God, for “of such is the kingdom of God.”

We close with the prayer of a seventeenth-century Puritan:

O God, I cannot endure to see the destruction of my kindred. Let those that are united to me in tender ties be precious in thy sight and devoted to thy glory. Sanctify and prosper my domestic devotion, instruction, discipline, example, that my house may be a nursery for Heaven, my church the garden of the Lord, enriched with the trees of righteousness of thy planting, for thy glory. Let not those of my family who are amiable, moral, attractive, fall short of heaven at last. Grant that the promising appearances of tender conscience, soft heart, the alarms and delights of thy Word, be not finally blotted out, but bring forth judgment unto victory in all whom I love.
